THE BRENTHURST LIBRARY

Brenthurst Estate
Federation Road
Johannesburg

The Brentthurst Library houses the Africana collection of the Oppenheimer family

In the early twentieth century, Sir Ernest Oppenheimer became keenly interested in the history of southern Africa and started collecting manuscripts and rare books. His son, Harry Oppenheimer, expanded and developed the Library into an internationally-recognized institution. He established The Brenthurst Press to publish fine limited editions on the history and natural history of southern Africa. Mary Slack continues her late father's great interest and involvement in the Library and the Press.

The Brenthurst Library is responsible for acquiring, managing and preserving the collection which consists of manuscripts, artworks, rare books, pamphlets and maps relating to southern Africa.

The Library is open to researchers and visitors by appointment and there are ongoing exhibition and lecture programmes. Manuscripts and artworks are lent to exhibitions and venues around South Africa and abroad.

THE BINDERY

Preservation and enhancement of the collection takes place in the Bindery which practises the restoration and preservation of paper and leather and associated crafts such as leaf-casting, paper making, hand-marbling, gilding, binding and tooling, utilising innovative techniques to the highest archival standards. The binder also gives expert advice and assistance to professional organizations.
